

Useful Strategies and Websites for Searching for Academic and Clinical Positions

General Strategies

- Go to websites for specific organizations and institutions (e.g., www.usajobs.gov, www.kp.org)
- Network through professional organizations, search organizational websites, and get on listservs, including APA, APA Divisions, SBM, GSA, NAN, ABCT, etc.
- Get on your college and graduate program alumni listservs
- Go to your college or university career center websites
- You can also access the public side of the Stanford Career Development Center which provides useful advice and resources on CVs, cover letters, and the job search process for PhDs, as well as a comprehensive PhD and postdoc Career Guide: <https://careers.stanford.edu/>
- You can also go to APA's resource website for early career psychologists for general information and resources, including career development, financial planning, and listservs www.apa.org/careers/early-career/index.aspx
- To help you with salary negotiation, check www.opm.gov for federal salary rates in specific geographical regions, www.apa.org for APA's most recent psychology salary survey by setting (2009 general survey; 2015 faculty survey), www.glassdoor.com for comparable salaries by position and location reported by "insiders," and www.salary.com for free salary data by location
